

“Social Mobility and Migration. Multidisciplinary Perspectives”

June 21, 2011 · EURAC · Bolzano/Bozen · Italy

Social mobility is a crucial topic in the debate and research on migration. The elimination of inequalities in the host communities and the acquisition of competences by migrants and citizens with a migration background are essential in improving their status. The key to the functioning of intercultural societies is economic, social and political participation, dialogue, and the willingness of all parties to be active citizens in a new societal environment. The process of bringing migrants and individuals with migration background to an equal social status in society requires work in the field of legal framework, social affairs, labour market, education and culture. The policies concerning migrants and individuals with migration background should have a holistic approach, focusing on social and economic mobility, education, health, social services and participation in the wider societal life.

The goal of the international, cross-disciplinary conference “Social Mobility and Migration. Multidisciplinary Perspectives” is to create a forum in which dialogue can develop between scholars and practitioners. In this way participants can share knowledge and experience about the challenges of migration and analyse, through a multi-disciplinary approach, the different perspectives of social mobility.

MigrAlp (www.eurac.edu/migralp)

The EURAC Institute for Minority Rights, in collaboration with ZeMiT (Centre for Migrants in Tyrol), has developed the Interreg-funded MigrAlp project (2009-2011), in which international migration to South Tyrol (Italy) and Tyrol (Austria) has been analysed and compared. The research results of MigrAlp are summarised in a multidisciplinary publication (to be published June 2011) that provides insight into South Tyrol's diversity management, as well as developments in Austria's political debate on integration, and gives an overview of the historic and demographic developments, legal frameworks and social dimension of migration in the two regions. MigrAlp also explores migration in rural areas, with the goal of developing an index on integration in selected fields (labour, housing, education, etc.) that will make integration measurable and propose integrative actions to local governments and public administration (publication forthcoming in 2011). The project intends to sensitise the local community in migration and integration in order to combat xenophobia, racism and stereotypes, to promote the advantages of diverse societies, and to foster solidarity between the ethnic groups. In accordance with these aims, the project developed a role-play on anti-discrimination called 'Space Migrants 2513', primarily addressed to schools and youth organisations and a campaign for diversity.
